During the past decade, hundreds of thousands of students in America were victims of school violence. These victimizations varied from thefts and assaults to shootings and killings. This conference will teach students how to exercise creative leadership to prevent violence at school and to make their campuses safe and secure learning environments.

This conference will specifically teach students how to participate in the development of school, community, and law enforcement partnerships and will include participation by parents and representatives from local community, business, government, and law enforcement organizations. The conference director will be Gus Frias, coordinator of school safety programs for the Los Angeles County Office of Education.
